Philosophy and objectives

For the third year, this meeting of debate on the main current challenges, opportunities and problems of the publishing sector takes place in Barcelona, the international publishing capital in the Spanish and Catalan languages and a member of the UNESCO City of Literature network. The Edita Forum, organised by the Catalan Guild of Publishers and Editors and UPF Barcelona School of Management, is sponsored by Barcelona City Council and has the collaboration of the Association of Catalan Language Publishers and Editors, CEDRO, the Catalan Ministry of Culture, the Spanish Ministry of Culture and Sport, and the Spanish Federation of Guilds of Publishers and Editors.

Key aspects of the project: The energy of innovation

A meeting with major prescribers

The Edita Forum is a platform in which local and international experts annually debate the main challenges facing the publishing sector, with a professional and practical approach. This year’s conference, whose central issue is innovation, will have the presence of some of the major prescribers in the global books world, such as the CEO at Penguin Random House Markus Dohle, the editor Luigi Spagnol and the consultant Rüdiger Wischenbart, who will share with the audience their points of views about the world publishing panorama and its related innovations.

The journey of literary content towards new formats

The adaptations of literary contents into other formats such as cinema or television, audiobooks or narrative on WhatsApp are elements of innovation in the publishing sector. Moreover, Chef Ferran Adrià will tell us about his Bullipedia. These and other experiences will be discussed in several sessions of the Edita Forum 2018.
European book and copyright protection policies

Has Europe understood the need for protecting and safeguarding the book industry as a guarantee of continuity and cultural excellence? This issue will be addressed in two sessions: one on copyright within the framework of the Digital Single Market, moderated by the President of the Spanish Federation of Guilds of Publishers and Editors Daniel Fernández and another attended by Vincent Monadé, President of the Centre National du Livre.

The author’s gaze

Taking over from Eduardo Mendoza and Javier Cercas, who in the previous conferences spoke about their relationship with the publishers who have released their work, this time Almudena Grandes will talk about her personal experience in the publishing world.

The challenges of bookshops and libraries

Bookshops and libraries are the most direct link between books and readers. Their role as prescribers and also as cultural agents is facing big challenges given the constant change in people’s consumption habits. With practical cases and expert professionals, we will debate in two roundtables how to address these challenges.

Emerging publishing houses

In recent years the book sector has significantly transformed and its dynamism has brought about the emergence of new publishing houses that have found a place in the market. Its protagonists will share their experience and provide their views on the future of the publishing world.
The organisers

The Catalan Guild of Publishers and Editors

Institution that embodies five centuries of Catalonia’s publishing tradition. It embraces more than 200 publishing companies with 50.8% of the total Spanish publishing turnover. It is particularly representative in fields such as literature, with a market share of 80%, books for children and young people (65%), educational books (75%), dictionaries, encyclopaedias or comics (80%).

Around 25 publishing houses in the guild have over 120 subsidiaries or branches in approximately thirty countries in Europe, Asia and America.

Committed to improving and developing the sector, the Guild currently supports a wide range of professional and cultural activities.

UPF Barcelona School of Management

UPF Barcelona School of Management’s prestigious Master in Publishing and Editing is now in its 20th year. This master is one of the major international references for training in the profession and has become one of Barcelona’s hallmarks in the field of publishing leadership. In this period, it has trained several generations of professionals who are today responsible for publishing projects in Catalonia, Spain, Latin America and Europe. Notable among the institutions and companies that regularly contribute to it are the Catalan Guild of Publishers and Editors, the Grupo Planeta, the Penguin Random House group, Anagrama, CEDRO, La Central, RBA, Google, Cayfosa or the Guadalajara International Book Fair (Mexico), the most important fair of the sector in Spanish, and the Frankfurt Book Fair, the most important in the world.
Programme

“The Energy of Innovation”

This year, the Edita Forum will have major prescribers in the global universe of books, such as Markus Dohle, Rüdiger Wischenbart, Luigi Spagnol and Vincent Monadé. Latin American publishing and European copyright protection policies and the challenges of bookshops and libraries will be the focus of two roundtables. The adaptation of novels for TV series, the new forms of the audiobook and reading on WhatsApp will also take centre stage this time. New publishing houses, favoured by the transformation of the sector and its dynamism, will share their experience with the audience. Moreover, one of the writers with greater international scope, Almudena Grandes, will explain her experiences in the publishing world, as did Eduardo Mendoza and Javier Cercas in past years. We will also have the privilege to welcome one of the great international creators today, Ferran Adrià, who will tell us about his publishing ventures and his Bullipedia project.

by Alfons Cornella:

Complexity. We are heading towards a complex world, where everything is interrelated, where there is a cascade of phenomena beyond our control and where the cause-effect relation has vanished.

Generations. It is inhabited by people of different ages with value systems, aspirations and forms of relations and who regard the proposals they receive very differently. A world in which the range of products and services must be expressed in multiple ways for the different generations.

Asia. The world will be decided by the Millennials and the Gen Z. Asia will not be another West, it is a thousand-year old civilisation that sees things such as freedom and a critical spirit differently. Preparing for a presence in Asia will be essential for many.

Experiment. In this coming complex world it will be difficult to plan and make the right choice. Consequently... it will be paramount to learn to experiment with, repeat and try the product concepts directly in the market before launching them. Science has always advanced by experimenting. In business, experimentation has always been frightening. It is time to reverse this situation.

Alfons Cornella. Graduate in Physics from the University of Barcelona. He holds an MS in Information Resources Management from Syracuse University in New York and a postgraduate degree in Business Management from ESADE Barcelona.

Founder and CEO of Infonomia, an innovation services company and source of ideas for restless innovators since 2000. Founder, in 2009, of Co-society, an initiative to encourage the systematic business intersection between companies, and in 2017, of Institute of Next, a space to help companies think about the near future and how it will affect them.

He is a consultant for major companies and has managed over 100 projects on the creation of culture and the revitalisation of innovation teams in different types of organisations, particularly in the private sector, and has published 23 books on science, technology and innovation as driving forces in transforming companies.
